Module Outline:

This part of the Labour Markets, Gender and Institutions course is called Markets, States and Work. It introduces students to important concepts, theories and empirical research in economic sociology and the sociology of work.

The first section of the course discusses classical interpretations of the rise of 'market society' before analysing different systems of capitalism and welfare in Europe and the role of the state in shaping economies and societies and responding to pressures for institutional change. The second section focuses on contemporary experiences of work and unemployment in Western Europe, including skills and work, services work, precarious work and care work. In particular, we engage with debates on change and continuity in working lives in 'post-industrial' Europe. Finally, in the third section, Western European labour markets are analysed through the prism of labour migration. We examine policies on high skilled and low skilled labour immigration, as well as foreign workers' experiences in different labour markets.

Module Learning Objectives:

On successful completion students will be equipped to:

- Relate classical interpretations of market society with contemporary experiences at work;
- Compare and contrast and critically analyse different forms of capitalism in Western Europe;
- Engage in debates on the future of welfare states;
- Critically analyse theories of change and continuity in contemporary work experiences; Describe and account for different labour immigration policies in Western Europe;
- Communicate effectively in both oral and written form through PowerPoints, discussions, and research essays.

Assessment:

- 20% Student presentation.
- 80% Assignment.
