Module Outline:

This module examines key forms of contemporary international movement, migrations, mobilities and transnationalism. We begin with an overview of the main migration phases globally before moving on to explore aspects of contemporary migration such as intra-European mobility, high skilled migration, irregular migration, and lifestyle migration. Conceptual and empirical discussions will be linked to wider social transformations including the globalisation, securitization, and climate change.

Module Learning Objectives:

Upon completion of this course, you will be able to:

- distinguish between key concepts such as migration, mobility and transnationalism;
- explain and critically discuss the main theories of migration;
- discuss and evaluate the links between migration, globalisation, securitization and the economy;
- critically engage and examine current empirical research and policy documents in the field of migration.

Assessment:

- 80% take home exam.
- 20% Student presentation and tutorial attendance.
